Top Ten Benefits of Correctional Industries

Reduces Recidivism

Correctional Industries (CI) is a proven program that works. CI's recidivism rate of 15.4% vs. the state rate of 33.6%¹ illustrates that offenders working in CI are less likely to return to prison than the average offender.

Generates Return on Investment

A Washington State Institute for Public Policy study concluded that CI programs generate significant savings of taxpayer dollars. For every $1.00 spent on CI, $4.77³ is saved in future criminal justice costs due to the reduction in recidivism.

Provides Victim Restitution

Offenders who participate in CI programs are able to contribute to their financial obligations from their earnings. Over $108 Million⁶ has been contributed to Victim Compensation and Restitution Funds through PIECP.

Saves Taxpayers Money

90%² of CI programs are self-funded and operate solely from the revenue they generate from the products and services they provide, without relying on tax-appropriated funds.

Supports Businesses & Economy

CI purchases over in raw materials, supplies, component $1.2 Billion⁴ parts, equipment and services to support its operations. In doing so, they rely heavily on small businesses in the community, returning much of the revenue to local businesses.

Supports Veterans

CI employs veterans in both civilian staff and offender worker positions. CI works with disadvantaged and disabled veteran-owned businesses.

Keeps Prisons & Communities Safer

CI programs effectively reduce offender idleness inside our prisons which is proven to decrease violence against staff and offenders. CI provides offenders with job skills, enabling them to successfully reenter society, obtain employment, and contribute as tax-paying citizens.

Builds Family Ties

Offenders working in CI are able to send a portion of their earnings home to support their families, offsetting the need for additional taxpayer public assistance programs. Over $54 Million⁵ has been contributed to Family Support Payments through the Prison Industry Enhancement Certification Program (PIECP).

Made in the USA

Products manufactured by CI are made in the United States, supporting domestic jobs and our nation's economy. CI serves as a domestic resource to perform work that would otherwise be done outside the United States.

Reduces Cost of Incarceration

The existence of self-sustaining CI programs offsets the need to spend additional taxpayer dollars for offender supervision and alternative program costs.
